Announcing Groundbreaking!

Construction to begin in April on Museum's New Building

On April 13, 1991, at 11 A.M., the quiet tranquility of our Linwood site will be replaced by the sounds of backhoes, bulldozers, and other construction equipment. Soon, there will be a hole measuring about one-third of an acre where there is now only a pretty field dotted with surveyor's markers.

No one's complaining. In fact, the museum's staff and trustees are overjoyed. That large, noisy hole will become the foundation of our long-awaited new home. After years of negotiating, planning, and fundraising, the first physical step toward the construction of our new facility will be taken with groundbreaking. The building is scheduled for completion in 1992. An official opening date has not yet been established.

On February 2, 1991 at a special meeting, the museum's board of trustees voted unanimously to proceed with construction and to award the construction contract for the $4.1 million building to Peabody Construction Co., Inc. of Braintree, Massachusetts. Peabody was one of nine general contractors invited to submit offers. Although the firm is based in Braintree, at least 40% of the labor and materials used in construction of the new building will come directly from Berkshire County. Museum President Lila Berle said that "the board's decision to break ground confirms a strong faith in the future of the museum and a commitment to preserve and exhibit the works of America's favorite illustrator for generations to come."

From The Director
Laurie Norton Moffatt

Groundbreaking! It is the day we have all been awaiting. With our board's decision to commence construction on April 13, 1991, the new building is well on its way to becoming a reality.

This milestone is the culmination of years of hard work by many people. It is a great moment to celebrate. I hope all of you will be with us to cheer on April 13 as the backhoes begin digging. We could not have come this far without the help each of you has provided.

We have witnessed many milestones in this quest to provide a permanent and secure home for Norman Rockwell's collection—the studio move, carriage barn renovation, Linwood House renovation, selection of an architect, design of the new building, the bidding, selection of a contractor, and raising the funds necessary to execute our plans. The remaining steps to construct the building and to move into our new home are at hand.

We have proceeded with purpose and care, evaluating each step of the way so that the museum will continue to be on a strong footing when we move to the building. Throughout these years, the museum has continued to grow, a testament to the appeal of Norman Rockwell. Without the good work and support of our members and donors, we would not be where we are today.

The reward for all of our efforts will be the preservation of an American treasure, the art of Norman Rockwell, and the experience of viewing that art in a spacious, wonderful environment designed especially for Rockwell's work. We all can be very proud.

The Museum In the News
Bea Snyder, manager of public affairs

The museum has been receiving national and international press coverage as a result of two articles written by Associated Press reporter Michelle Locke and a photograph taken by Associated Press photographer Alan Solomon. The photo appears on the cover of this newsletter.

In December, Locke reviewed Flops!, our current exhibition of images Rockwell viewed as unsuccessful. The article appeared in newspapers from Maine to Hawaii. In January, Locke again visited the museum for a lecture given by former Rockwell models. She interviewed Franklin Lischke, who posed for Rockwell during the time the artist lived in New Rochelle. Solomon took a photo of Mr. Lischke, now 82, in front of No Swimming, which Lischke posed for at the age of 13.
Museum to Receive Award
Benefit Dinner May 9

In recognition of the museum's role in preserving the artistic legacy of Norman Rockwell, the National Arts Club of New York will honor The Norman Rockwell Museum at Stockbridge with the club’s Gold Medal at a benefit gala on May 9 in New York. Tickets are $250, with proceeds earmarked for The Campaign for Norman Rockwell. The Gold Medal award is presented annually; past recipients include Robert Motherwell and Salvador Dali.

Thomas Hoving, former editor of Connoisseur, will serve as master of ceremonies. Museum Director Laurie Norton Moffatt and architect Robert A.M. Stern, who designed our new building, will speak. The National Arts Club, which is located at 15 Gramercy Park South in New York City, will have an exhibition of 35 original Rockwells on view from April 23 through May 12. The show is being organized and sponsored by Judy Goffman Fine Art. For ticket information and further details about the gala, please call (413) 298-4239.

Trumbull Joins Board

The museum is pleased to announce the addition of Douglas Trumbull to its board of trustees. A Hollywood legend in the field of special photographic effects, Trumbull has set new standards for the film industry and created state-of-the-art technology with his award-winning special effects in films such as 2001: A Space Odyssey and The Andromeda Strain. Trumbull is president of Berkshire Motion Picture and Berkshire Ridefilm Corporation, located in nearby Housatonic, Massachusetts. The board now has 27 members.

A New Summer Lecture Series!
Thomas Sgouros First Speaker July 8

Award-winning artist and illustrator Thomas Sgouros will kick off The Golden Age of Illustration and Beyond, the museum’s summer lecture series, when he speaks on July 8, at 7 P.M., at The Red Lion Inn. Each talk in the three-part series will explore a different aspect of illustration and will be presented by an expert in the field.

Sgouros is an award-winning illustrator and painter who chairs the Design Division at Rhode Island School of Design, where he earned a bachelor of fine arts degree more than 40 years ago. While still a student, he had his first piece published in 1949. Since then, his work has appeared in such publications as Time and Life, and he has created advertising work for companies like TWA and Coca-Cola. Sgouros’ s watercolors are included in public and private collections.

Make a night of this event by participating in a special after-hours tour of the museum prior to the lecture (5:30-7 P.M.). The admission fee for the tour/lecture is $8.00, $3.00 for our members. The lecture-only fee is $5.00, $3.00 for members. Space is limited, and preregistration is advised. Call (413) 298-4065 to preregister.

Reserve August 12 and September 9 for the other two lectures in the series. Speakers and details will be announced soon.

Museum Has Record Year

The museum enjoyed a record year in 1990. Attendance for last year totaled 147,687 people, an increase of 970 visitors over 1989.
Members' Voices—Let's Hear from You

Bea Snyder, manager of membership

I grew up enjoying Rockwell on the Post covers—it was wonderful to find that my children found them as riveting. The tour and staff were great. My family looks forward to seeing more of his work in your wonderful new museum.

Woman from Pennsylvania, age 54

This was my first visit. I was totally overwhelmed by his talent and especially loved the humor in his art. You'll be seeing me again in your new place, but promise to keep it as gracious as your staff.

Man from Ontario, Canada, age 36

These are just two of hundreds of comments collected during a survey of our museum visitors begun in July of 1990. Upon conclusion of a tour, visitors are invited to complete a simple questionnaire. These surveys are continuing and, by June, we will have gathered a complete year's worth of valuable information. This survey provides basic demographics and an important seasonal profile of our visitors. The more we know about who our visitors are, why they come, and how they learn about our museum and its programs, the better able we are to plan for an exciting future.

In the past five years, audience has emerged as a major focus in thinking about how well museums serve their missions and publics. Current research reveals that visitation patterns will change dramatically during the last decade of this century. Museums across America are exploring ways to serve expanded audiences—from students, to people with disabilities, to older adults. Who is being discussed not only in relation to age and income, but in terms of interests, learning styles, education, and the needs of a rapidly changing marketplace.

Our museum's growing audience reflects the ever-increasing popularity of Norman Rockwell. He continues, more than a decade after his death, to be one of America's most beloved illustrators. This popularity is reflected in our museum's attendance, which has shown a steady increase since we opened in 1969, when 5,000 visitors "came to see the paintings." Over the next 20 years visitation expanded dramatically, both in total numbers and geographic representation. Summer surveys in July and August revealed that, generally, our visitors are adults (75%) with most of them (64%) 35 years and older. Families and student groups presently comprise between 10 to 15% of our total, and these percentages are increasing because of the many new programs designed especially for students and children. Geographically, 9% came from Berkshire County, 20% from Massachusetts, and 75% were from the Northeast. Foreign visitors represented 7%. Repeat summer visitors accounted for 18%. Ongoing surveys offer insights and perspectives on why The Norman Rockwell Museum continues to be the most-visited cultural attraction in Berkshire County.

As the opening of the new building gets closer, now is the perfect time to find out more about our members. What we learn from you will enable us to be more responsive to your needs and expectations of interesting exhibitions and programs for the new museum. Over the past three years, membership has grown 63%. We have members in all fifty states and nine foreign countries. We want to know more about you than simple statistics.

Please take a few minutes out of your busy lives to complete our first members' survey. We've been told that people often do not respond to surveys. However, our membership is a loyal and committed group that has always come through when we needed it. We need your help now. Anyone who completes a survey will be sent a token of our appreciation. We have enclosed a postage-paid envelope for your convenience. Thank you for taking the time to help us get to know you better.

Calling All Artists

If you are an artist interested in displaying and selling your original work as part of our annual art sale on July 27 and July 28, call Bea Snyder at (413) 298-4239 for details and an application.

Exhibitions

Through January 1, 1992

Flops!
Norman Rockwell, in his autobiography, My Adventures as an Illustrator, devoted a chapter to Flops! The impression and stories recounted in this chapter serve as the inspiration of this exhibition. A flop is described by Rockwell as a “good idea gone bad.” The exhibition focuses on those images which Rockwell discusses in his chapter.

Through December 31, 1992

Off His Walls
A special exhibition of illustration art from the personal collection of Norman Rockwell. The pieces in the show were part of a study collection from which Rockwell drew both inspiration and great enjoyment. Included are works by Charles Edmund Brock, Thomas Fogarty, A.B. Frost, John Held, Jr., J.C. Leyendecker, Maxfield Parrish, Edward Penfield, Howard Pyle, Arthur Rackham, and Hugh Thomson.

---

The Three Spinners by Arthur Rackham are just a few of the intriguing characters found in Off His Walls.

April 23-May 12

Off-site Rockwell Exhibition
Thirty-five original Rockwell works and a small exhibit about our museum. The show is sponsored and organized by Judy Goffman Fine Art in New York. Call (212) 475-5424 for details. National Arts Club, 5 Gramercy Park South, New York City.

The Norman Rockwell Museum
Stockbridge, MA

We've Come A Long Way

Plans for the new museum started as early as 1980, when it became clear that there was a severe problem with overcrowding at the present site. In 1983, the museum acquired the Linwood property, which overlooks the Housatonic River and includes a large nineteenth-century marble house and a Victorian carriage barn. Between 1985 and 1986, these buildings were renovated. The carriage barn was completely rebuilt to provide on-site caretaker housing, and the main house was renovated to accommodate the museum's administrative offices. Norman Rockwell's studio, which was left in trust to the museum, was moved from the center of Stockbridge to Linwood on March 4, 1986. The studio will be open to visitors when the new museum is complete.

The New Building

The new museum was designed by internationally-known architect Robert A. M. Stern of New York City after an invitational architectural competition held in 1987. Plans call for the building, which includes galleries, classrooms, an auditorium, a library, studios, and archive storage, to cover an area of 27,000 square feet. There will be 12,000 square feet on the main level and 15,000 square feet on the lower level. The new gallery will have 7,500 square feet of exhibition space as compared to the 1,500 square feet at the present location.

About Our Builders

Peabody Construction Company, Inc. has been in the construction business for more than 100 years. President Edward Fish, Jr. is the fourth generation to assume the leadership role at Peabody. The firm has just completed the addition to the Kennedy Library in Boston, which was designed by internationally-known architect I.M. Pei.

Paying for it All - Where We Stand

Our board approved a financing plan which will insure successful completion of the project, according to William Napolitano, treasurer. The plan includes an ongoing capital campaign, which has raised $3.2 million to date; outside financing of $3.5 million of a tax-exempt bond program developed by the Massachusetts Industrial Finance Agency; leverage of museum real estate properties; profits from the museum store; sale of limited-edition prints signed by Rockwell as an endowment for the museum; revenue from the museum's mail-order program, admissions, and membership programs; and campaign gifts.

Cause to Celebrate!

Many festivities are being planned to celebrate construction. The first event is groundbreaking on April 13, at 11 A.M., at our Linwood site. See the calendar for other important dates.

We Need Your Help Now More than Ever

Keep the momentum going on the new building by sending a donation today to The Campaign for Norman Rockwell. A postage-paid envelope is provided for your convenience.
Silvio Conte Dead at 69
Honorary Museum Trustee and
U.S. Representative

Henry H. Williams, Jr., assistant director for finance and administration

The Norman Rockwell Museum lost a friend with the death of Congressman Silvio O. Conte on February 8, 1991 in Washington, D.C. Mr. Conte, an ardent supporter of the museum, wrote in 1985 when accepting a position on the Capital Fundraising Committee, "Norman Rockwell has long been a favorite of mine, and I am honored to be associated with a man who so represents the soul of America." From his position of power in Washington spanning 32 years, he responded to museum needs. He was instrumental in persuading President Ronald Reagan to serve as honorary general chairman of phase one of the museum's capital campaign. He and his staff stood ready to help with any request, and at the time of his death, he was pursuing with the U.S. Postal Service a commemorative stamp to be issued on the 100th anniversary of Norman Rockwell's birth in 1994. Silvio Conte will be missed by us all.

Members' Bus Trip April 27

Our spring trip will take you to two great Connecticut museums, The New Britain Museum of American Art in New Britain and The Wadsworth Atheneum in Hartford. Illustration scholar Walt Reed will be along to answer questions. Nonmembers are welcome too, at an additional charge.

After leaving The Old Corner House on Saturday, April 27, we will visit The New Britain, the oldest museum collection devoted exclusively to American art and the home of more than 3,000 works. There are portraits by Copley and Cassatt and landscapes by Cole and Church. There's even a Rockwell image or two.

After we whet your appetite at the New Britain, we'll satisfy your hunger at Joe's American Bar and Grill before going on to the Wadsworth. We will tour for about an hour—just enough time to get a small taste of the more than 45,000 works in this collection, which includes Girl with a Black Eye by Rockwell.

Anyone who would like to join us at the sites is more than welcome. Members: $35.00; Nonmembers: $45.00. Prices include gratuities, bus fare, lunch, and admissions. For reservations, call (413) 298-4239 as soon as possible.

Bike Tours Rockwell Style

Bicyclists, young and old, will explore Norman Rockwell's Stockbridge haunts in bike tours sponsored by the museum. Rockwell and his wife were avid cyclists and could be seen several times each week in spring, summer, and fall bicycling through the village and countryside.

Starting in June and continuing through October, we will revisit Rockwell's bike routes. Experienced museum guides will lead the trips and provide commentary on historical and cultural aspects of the routes, and insights into Rockwell's character and his special recreational avocation. See our calendar for details. Further information on specific tours is available by calling (413) 298-4065.
The fairy tells time by the number of spins of his hat in The Magic Foot-Ball, currently on view in Off His Walls. © 1914 The Norman Rockwell Family Trust.

Norman Rockwell’s painting for The Magic Foot-Ball, a children’s story by Ralph Henry Barbour, appeared in St. Nicholas magazine in 1914. This is a fanciful story in which dream becomes reality and the limits of our imagination are stretched.

Billy Piper dreams of being a football hero, and suddenly, from a dark corner of the room, a fairy emerges and grants Billy’s wish. The fairy gives Billy a magic football that responds to commands of “og” (meaning go) and “come.”

In addition to the football being magical, the fairy’s hat tells time by the number of spins it makes when being twirled on the end of a feather on the bridge of the fairy’s nose. “I never tell time,” the fairy tells Billy, “Time tells me.”

Rockwell’s painting of the scene between the fairy and Billy is as richly detailed as the author’s characterization. Though Rockwell was just 19 when he painted this picture, his concern for detail and human expression is already evident.

Rather than including only the basic elements needed for the illustration, Rockwell created an interior setting with numerous furnishings and objects which help to create a mood. The play of light between the brightness of the window seat on one side and the boy’s brightly lit face, accentuating his expression of awe, emphasizes the mystery of the dark areas and symbolizes the contrast between reality and dream.

The little fairy in the story is painted in a style similar to that of two illustrators whom Rockwell admired, Arthur Rackham and Howard Pyle. Their work, as well as The Magic Foot-Ball painting, is represented in Off His Walls, the museum’s exhibition of Rockwell’s personal art collection.

This fairy closely resembles a depiction of Rumplestiltskin done by Arthur Rackham in 1900. The proportions and manner of the figure are similar to Rackham’s creature. The faces are not alike except for the ears, but the features of Rockwell’s fairy are typical of Rackham’s other fairies. Rockwell’s figure is also similar to Pyle’s “mannikin,” created in 1886.

The myth of a strange creature, at once frightening and intriguing, who has magical powers to fulfill wishes, is restated through Rockwell’s picture for another generation of children as a tradition to be carried on and on.
Spotlight on Saving Energy
Bill Boyer, facilities manager

The museum is dedicated to energy conservation on environmental and financial levels. All of our offices recycle, and we are working on making our buildings as energy efficient as possible. Two recent grant awards have made it possible to accomplish major energy-saving projects.

Museum Awarded Energy Conservation Grant
The Commonwealth of Massachusetts's Nonprofit Energy Efficiency Program (NEEP) awarded the museum an energy grant of $9,797.55. These funds were used to help finance such energy-conservation measures as weatherproofing, attic insulation, storm windows, and a more efficient boiler at the museum's administrative offices.

The NEEP grant provides technical and financial assistance to help nonprofit organizations improve the energy efficiency of their facilities. This grant will pay for part of a $14,595.00 energy improvement project. Museum Director Laurie Norton Moffatt said, "We are grateful to the Commonwealth for this important contribution to our energy conservation efforts."

New Lighting at Old Corner House
The museum recently participated in an energy conservation program offered by The Massachusetts Electric Company. Mass Electric hired Torrico Electrical Contractors of nearby Great Barrington to replace, at no charge to the museum, lighting fixtures in the museum galleries and administrative offices. Included in the fixture replacement were gallery track lighting, hall and office lighting, and exterior lighting. In addition to providing more pleasing lighting, the new fixtures will save money on electrical costs.

The museum is very appreciative of this generous gift. Michael Horton, the senior lighting representative from New England Power Service (Massachusetts Electric's parent company) was sensitive to the museum's special needs revolving around displaying the collection of original artwork. Harry T. McDonough, president of Energy Advantage, was very helpful in administering the grant.
